

PATRICK GARBIN is a freelance writer, editor, and researcher. He has earned the reputation as an authority and historian of college football, especially University of Georgia football. Patrick has written four books on Georgia Bulldogs football and has also been a consultant/researcher for several other football-related book projects. Patrick maintains the About Them Dawgs! Blawg – the only blog on the Internet primarily dedicated to the rich history and tradition of Georgia’s football program.

Patrick regularly contributes freelance articles to Covers.com, Sports Direct Inc., and blogs for PhilSteele.com. He also is a freelance writer and content coordinator for the eight college athletics-related online trivia games at Smart Folks, LLC. In the past, Patrick has worked at FanStop as a Senior Staff Writer and CNN Sports Illustrated and CNN Sports.

For more information on Patrick and his work, please visit his website at www.patrickgarbin.com and blog at www.patrickgarbin.blogspot.com.